EXCISE

made preparations for her to take a bath if she wished to. A White House telephone has also been set up, in case she wanted to call Washington.

Jimmy Dunn, to my great pleasure, came to see me this morning. Mary and he are spending three days in London, before returning to Rome. His life sounds quite ideal. He has achieved true retirement, having refused to serve on any Boards, or to be connected formally with any organizations, with the one exception of an institution devoted to children's welfare in Southern Italy. His tastes have turned more and more to studies connected with the Byzantine Empire. They are going this summer to a Seminar on the subject at Ravenna. He is a delightful fellow, and time has lain a light hand on him.

We had a lunch today for the Chauvels. They are leaving on May 1st. He has reached retirement age, and will be succeeded by Baron Geoffrey Chodron de Courcel, a career diplomat, whose grandfather was Ambassador to Great Britain in 1885. Our guests at lunch were:

Sir Harold and Lady Caccia
Mr. and Mrs. Agar
Mr. Raimund & Lady Elizabeth von Hofmannsthal
Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Maudling
Mrs. Pleydell-Bouverie
Sir Harold Nicolson
Mr. and Mrs. Koch de Gooreynd
Mr. and Mrs. Newsom

Francis McIntyre came to see me this morning, in further pursuance of his researches on the Common Market for Caltex.
